Those who participated in the tendance is expected for the second meetmeeting were the territorial pioneers who became residents of Nebraska prior to I Starling Motton and Hen B E H. March 1, 1867, and those who have resided In the state for fifteen years or more.

The president of the association, ex-Gov. ernor Robert W. Furnas, called the ploneers to order and introduced Dr. George L. Miller, one of the earliest settlers of the state. Dr. Miller welcomed his auditors to the exposition in his official capacity as president, and gave them cordial greeting. He characterized the occasion as an important one In its relation to the history of Nebraska the pioneers have within the past year been yesterday by an exposition guard and called into the hereafter, and it is alto- brought to the city jail by Sergeant Hayes gether improbable that such a large number to be arraigned on the charge of incorrigiagain have the pleasure of meeting together. | yellow-back literature to emulate the deeds 'The purpose of this organization," said Dr. Miller, "is the perpetuation in memory from home several weeks ago and journeyed of the things accomplished by these grayhaired men and women in their youth when selves by hunting game and to find amusethey began life on the prairies of Nebraska to carve out their fortunes and at the same time the future of one of the greatest states in the union. President Furnas acknowledged himself to be at an utter loss to express his joy in being able to meet once more with the pioneers of Nebraska who laid the foundation for what we and our children are now enjoying. He stated the desire of the organization to preserve a complete record of the experiences of the early settlers in order that their deeds and achievements may be handed down to posterity. In this way future credit and honor will be given those to whom it is due.

North's Reminiscences.

J. E. North of Columbus gave a highly Interesting talk of his early experiences in the state. He said in part: "It is a source of great pleasure to me to associate with the pioneers of Nebraeka. Whenever I meet a man or a woman who became a resident of this state before the advent of the railroads I feel a relationship almost as close as that of brothers. We certainly have great cause for gratification in the progress which has been made in Nebraska, all of which has come in the wake of railroad building. Progress in settlement was very slow prior to the building of railroads west of the Missouri river. I landed in Nebraska on the 10th of May, 1856, and have been here ever | done with reference to this for a few weeks pince. For two years after my arrival I yet. I do not believe that the Spaniards or any other tribe ever lived there with the exception of such temporary settlements as the Indians may have had in roving about the western country. Isaac Hascall, one of Omaha's pioneers, was called upon for a speech and delivered a highly entertaining, reminiscent talk of his early experiences in the west. He related the event of his leaving home back in New York when but a mere boy on July 4 1847. He was auxious to see the west and followed the Great Lakes to Chicago, which then had no railroads, although a city of 20,000 people. He spent some time in the Mississippi valley and after visiting his old home started for Nebraska in 1854. The nearest railroad point then was at Franklin. about forty miles from St. Louis, Judge Hascall got as far as Kansas, where he spent the winter of 1854-55, and in the spring came up the Platte river to Nebraska. His stay in the territory was brief at that time and after traveling throughout west for several years he came to Omaha in 1865. Judge Hascall's address was replete with incidents of the early development of the state and the city. He spoke of the men who had been prominently identified with the advancement of the state,
